FRED HUTTON: In other news this evening, the controversy continues. Information about the lucrative severance package received by former Eastern Health President and CEO George Tilley has raised some eyebrows. Mr. Tilley resigned amid the uproar over flawed breast cancer and radiology tests. But despite being at the center of the scandal, he'll receive a healthy severance. Here's NTV's Carolyn Stokes with more.

CAROLYN STOKES: Last month Health Minister Ross Wiseman pointed the finger at the former Eastern Health President and CEO for mishandling the disclosure of flawed breast cancer hormone test results and radiology reports.

ROSS WISEMAN: Not happy with that kind of performance. And I thought that the process had obviously been mismanaged.

CAROLYN STOKES: The Health minister said he never asked for George Tilley's resignation but he got it. And Mr. Tilley has since been unreachable by media. Now with the release of information regarding a lucrative severance package, NDP Leader Lorraine Michael is wondering if Mr. Tilley was paid to disappear.

LORRAINE MICHAEL: It certainly smacks of that, that it happened because the minister did not want Mr. Tilley to continue in his position, that, that's my assumption based on the information that we now have.

JOAN DAWE: As part of the terms of the resignation there were provisions for severance. That severance was agreed upon with Mr. Tilley and approved by the board and the minister of Health and Community Services.

CAROLYN STOKES: Joan Dawe is chair of Eastern Health's board of directors. She wouldn't discuss the details of the package but it's been reported that Mr. Tilley will receive his full year's salary worth $255,000. He will also receive other benefits and can collect unused paid leave.

LORRAINE MICHAEL: But I don't see this kind of a package for somebody who has resigned. So that's what makes me question. That's what smells fishy. If he got this kind of contract because he resigned, then I think one has to ask well does that mean that his resignation was asked for. It certainly is a kind of package that one negotiates when a resignation is asked for.

CAROLYN STOKES: Ms. Michael says that in the spirit of transparency she invites Minister Wiseman to answer her questions about the severance package. But for now government is not commenting. Carolyn Stokes, NTV News.
